Essex Street Market History

1866

Four street peddlers on Hester Street congregated together to create an open air pushcart market.

1919

The City establishes the Department of Public Markets to regulate open-air pushcart markets as peddlers proliferate citywide.

1934

Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia vows to clear the streets of pushcarts and build a network of modern indoor markets.

1940

Essex Street Market officially opens with 475 stalls across 4 buildings and quickly becomes an important center for food education during wartime shortages.

1955

Mayor LaGuardia's vision for a citywide market network completes with the opening of the 10th public market in Harlem.

1990s

Vendors offering shift away from largely Italian and Jewish products to meet the demands of and increasing Latino population in the Lower East Side.

1995

New York City Economic Development Corporation commenced a renovation to consolidate tenants into the current Essex Street Market space.

2017

Essex Street Market is a diverse, bustling marketplace providing unique opportunities for small businesses and an authentic shopping experience for customers.

2018

Essex Street Market moves to brand new facilities on the South side of Delancey at Essex Street.

New York City's oldest public food market will soon be the newest.

Essex Street Market Ground Floor Plan

“For food lovers, there’s no question where to head when you come out of the Essex St. station on the J line. It’s right into the Essex Street Market.”

New York Daily News, 2017

“The Essex Street Market is one of those New York quintessential types of places—a mix of old Lower East Side and the new, immigrant and hip.”

Serious Eats, 2013

“People from all over the city and even tourists are going to be intrigued by a beautiful new market being built in this neighborhood.”

NY1 News, 2016

“The Essex Street Market is not only a one-stop shop for all of your grocery needs, it has historical and cultural value as well.”

New York Metro Parents, 2016

A public market owned and managed by New York City Economic Development Corporation.
